In the window at E. A. Drown's drug store there is a box of coal and an interesting plan is connected with it. Every person after buying a bottle of "Drown's Warranted" cough medicine is entitled to one guess on the number of pieces of coal in the box; also a free guess is given with every other purchase after first buying a bottle of cough cure. The person who guesses the nearest to the number of pieces of coal in the box gets a ton of coal delivered at the house. It is certainly worth trying for.

A FEMALE SKIPPER

[Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure.]

We were a crew of twelve men in the brig Neptune, bound from Liverpool to Charleston, and Captain Doyle was married and brought his wife on board on the day of our sailing. He was an easy going man, and from the hour of her coming aboard she took matters into her own hands. After we had sailed she was all over the ship, giving orders here and there and demanding obedience, and it wasn't a day before everything was at loose ends and the brig in nobody's charge. She had never been to sea, but she announced that she was boss and would have things as she wished, and the week that we put in before anybody dared head a mutiny was a strange episode in a sailor's life.

We were eight days out when the climax came. Every man of us went aft and demanded of the captain that his wife be suppressed. He certainly realized that everything was at loose ends and that never had a peaceful ship had greater confusion aboard, but he had no promises to make. He was as clay in the woman's hands. When we had stated our case she let fly her temper, and of all the tongues possessed by women hers wagged the fastest and poured forth the most bitterness. She even went so far as to bring the captain's pistols from the cabin and beg him to shoot us down.

What we finally did, though the woman threatened us with a revolver every minute, was to lower away the longboat, stock her with water and provisions and abandon the craft. The mates and the steward refused to leave the brig, and if the weather held pleasant the four men left could work her into port or hold on until some passing craft lent them aid.

Twelve hours after our leaving the ship and heading for the Azores a gale came down on us from the south, and we had to turn and run before it. At daylight next morning we found ourselves within a mile of the Neptune. Short handed as she was, she had been obliged to run before the same gale, and she had lost a topmast and been otherwise banged about. As soon as she made us out we were signalled to close in and come aboard, and in the course of half an hour we found ourselves on her decks again. The captain met us more than halfway, saying that his wife should have no more to say and that he would not enter the incident in his log book, and, though the woman was on deck with him, she had nothing to say, good or bad.

We turned to after breakfast and got things shipshape and put the brig on her course. For three days we made fine runs and everything went well aboard. On the morning of the fourth day, however, the captain's wife broke loose again. She gave her husband a long and vigorous blessing and then turned on the mates, and before she got through every one on board had come in for a bit of her tongue. Her language to the first mate was resented, and what did she do but bring out a pistol and fire a bullet into his leg.

It was mutiny over again. When we saw that things were worse than before and that there was no hope for betterment we took to the longboat again. The second mate and steward were with us this time, and the chief officer would have been but for his wound. We got a piping gale from the east and went drifting off before it. Our drift continued for over fifty hours, and at times we gave up all hope, but the gale broke at last, the sea went down, and after a run of four hours what craft should we fall in with but the brig we had twice abandoned. We ran down to her, scarcely able to believe our eyes, and walking her quarter deck as coolly as if nothing had happened was the same termagant of a woman. As the captain was not in sight we lay off and on, not seeing our way clear, but presently the woman came to the rail and called:

"Get aboard here, you villains, and get to work! The captain is ill and the mate laid up with that bullet I gave him, and, though I'm a determined woman, I cannot sail this brig to Charleston by myself."

The sea looked mighty wide and the brig very inviting, and the result was that we tumbled aboard. We got the brig on her course, cleared up the decks, and then came the question of what was to happen when we had sailed her into port. We had twice been guilty of mutiny and abandonment, and no matter what excuses we might urge the lawyers and the courts might get us into a pretty pickle unless we had some guarantee in advance.

A messenger was sent to the captain, but the conduct of his wife had not only worried him into a fever, but in one of her ebullitions of temper she had assaulted him and inflicted such injuries that he was ashamed to appear on deck. He was ready to promise us immunity, but she would not let him settle the matter. She declared that she would prosecute the case to the last court and that none of us should escape prison, and after talking the matter over we decided to take to the longboat for the third time. When this decision was told her she replied:

"You villains deserve hanging, but when we reach Charleston I'll pay you off, and you can go where you will. That's all. Go to work."

We took her at her word and sailed the brig into port, and though she thirsted for revenge she did not prosecute. Two weeks later the Neptune set sail on her return voyage, having a new crew all around and the captain's wife continuing to be boss, and from that day to this the craft has not been heard of. Whatever her fate was, it was surely brought about by the greatest termagant that ever drew breath on land or sea. M. QUAD.

A Tonic for Old People

Adds Years to Life, Puts Life into Years—Dr. Chase's Blood and Nerve Food, the Great Blood and Flesh Maker, Brain and Nerve Tonic

Keeps you from growing old by keeping up your vital forces. When the human machinery begins to wear out, people grow old and go into decline and decay, the blood becomes thin and watery, the circulation poor, and the nerve forces shattered and weak, showing that certain essential elements of life are being exhausted from the blood and nerves. The exhaustion usually begins with cold and numb hands and feet. The stomach, bowels and bladder lose their power, often becoming partially, if not wholly, paralyzed. You grow weak and feeble and your vital forces so low that you begin to see that your health is being undermined. Dr. Chase's Blood and Nerve Food increases the action of the heart and the circulation of the blood, and builds up the system by replacing the same substances to the blood and nerves that have been worn out. Price 50 cents. Weigh yourself before taking it. Book free.

CARNEGIE HERO HUNTER.

Newspaper Man Appointed to Investigate Claims For Awards.

A hero hunter was recently engaged by the Carnegie hero fund commission, says a Pittsburgh special dispatch to the Philadelphia Press. Not that there is any hesitancy on the part of persons to proclaim themselves heroes, thousands of applications being on file, but the commissioners are not convinced they are the real thing. In order to be absolutely sure on this point George A. Campsey, a Pittsburgh newspaper man, has been engaged to investigate the claims of heroes.

He will travel all over the United States and Canada and will meet the heroes face to face, hear their stories, examine their proofs and talk to witnesses of the heroic deeds. Then he will report to the commission.

It is probable, in view of the great army of claimants, that the commission will add other hero hunters to the corps.
